DOG POISONER AT WORK; VALUABLE ANIMALS DIE

AUTO CRASHES INTO TREE ON OAK DRIVE

DRIVER INJURED IS TAKEN TO S. D. FOR TREATMENT

A. J. Pinkerton of Lakeside suffered injuries when the car he was driving crashed into a big eucalyptus tree on Oak Drive Wednesday evening.

The accident happened near the office of the Myers Land Co. A newspaper delivery boy happened to be delivering papers there at the time and he picked Mr. Pinkerton up and drove him to San Diego for hospital treatment.

It was stated that the auto first hit a plank over a culvert and then swerved into the tree. Mr. Pinkerton was reported to have suffered injuries to a shoulder. The front of the auto was smashed in.

Pottery Class Plan To be Discussed

All interested in ceramics and pottery are notifled that it is planned to open a pottery class here, the fall session of which will start Oct. 20, for an 8-weeks course.

A meeting to discuss the course will be held at the home of Miss Louise Ulrich, Monday, Oct. 16 from 2:30 to 4 p.m. Phone 584. The classes will be held at the Windmill Studio on Highway 80, each Friday 10 a.m. to 3 p.m.

Ham and Eggers to Hold 3 Meetings

The Ham-and-Eggers announce the following meetings:

Friday, Oct. 13, Grantville school; doors open at 7 p.m. Music will precede two good speakers.

Thursday, Oct. 19, El Cajon Grammar school; doors open at 7 p.m. "The Scarcity of Ages," motion picture will be shown, with musical numbers preceding.

Friday, Oct. 20, Suncrest Community Clubhouse; doors open at 7 p.m., music program, good speakers.

I pray thee, O God t,hat I may be beautiful within.—Socrates.

War On The Home Front

BUSINESS WILL BE GOOD, ACORNS HINT

Streeter Blair came in from his cattle ranch on Tuesday and left some big acorns at the Farmer office.

"Business will be good this winter," he said.

Asked for proof of such good news he stated that there's an old saying that when the acorns are large then business will be big, too.

However The Farmer will defer buying a new press for a while although members of the staff do know of a flourishing Acorn Press.

SHOW KINDNESS

I expect to pass through life but once. If therefore, there be any kindness I can show, or any good thing I can do to any fellow-being, let me do it now, and not defer or neglect it, as I shall not pass this way again. —Wm. Penn.

Gets 6-foot Rattler With Fishing Line

Using a fish pole and twenty feet of line J. L. Wedge, Foster rancher, caught the biggest rattle snake of the season on Tuesday. It measured 6 feet 1 inch from rattle to tongue.

Mr. Wedge was walking along a path on his ranch when he almost stepped on the reptile. Having no stick handy he went to the house, got a fish-pole, made a noose on the end of twenty feet of line, gently lowered the loop over the snake's head, and that was thirty for the rattler.

Proof that the snake measured 6 feet 1 inch was given The Farmer by Mr. Wedge for he brought the skin to the office and it proved to be almost as long as the lankiest member of the staff, who is 6 feet 4 inches.

Don't often see rattlers this time of the year, said Mr. Wedge; warm weather must have brought it out.

ASK AN ARCHITECT

Before modernizing an old home get the advice of a competent architect, is the recommendation of Federal Housing Administration.

TOURIST TRAVEL AS USUAL TO CANADA

The envelope looked very imposing. It was postmarked Ottawa, Ont., and addressed to the Chamber of Commerce. It bore on its face the letters O. H. M. S. also in larger type the word Free. Of course that meant it was a government letter. O. H. M. S. stands for On His Majesty's Service.

Open it!

Well, it just says in sonorous language that "although there has been an outbreak of war in Europe, involving Canada and the British Empire, these hostilities will not affect present regulations regarding tourist travel from the United States to Canada."

So if you are thinking of going to Canada don't worry about the war.

YOUTH'S APPEAL AGAINST WAR

By Enid Rose Goodpaster
Grossmont High School

Aching bodies
Broken hearts
Cries of anguish cross the world.
Missing loved ones,
Others dead,
Caught within the awful swirl.

Then life grows brighter,
Hearts do too,
Only to dim once more,
As the world
Grows dark about us,
Is is for another war?

Is the human soul
To suffer
Misery as it did before?
Please, God, help us
To prevent it
Let's not have another war.

Townsend Program Is Grand Success

Described as a grand success was the Townsend Club No. 1 of Lakeside potluck supper and program Tuesday evening. Both the entertainment and the speeches were much enjoyed. The local club had the pleasure of the attendance of 30 guests from Club 28 of San Diego.

President Dean of Club 28 gave a fine talk on the Townsend plan. Secretary Brown followed and Brother Egin sang a beautiful hymn. Brother Scott May also sang delightfully. He was accompanied by Gwendola Magor. The two singers received much praise from the audience.

The Meglin-Fanchon and Marco children gave their talented show directed by Miss Marjorie Hallack. This scored a hit.

The next meeting will be held Tuesday evening, Oct.17; all are invited.

COUNCIL TO MEET

The Lakeside Co-Ordinating Council will held its regular monthly meeting Thursday, October 19 at the grammar school promptly at 7:30 p.m.

P.-T. A. CARD PARTY SHOULD DRAW CROWD

ENRICHED LIVING IS TOPIC OF TALK BY PHYSICAN

By Mrs. Dorothy Morton
Publicity Chairman

Are you lucky at cards? This Friday the 13th is a good time to try that luck. Lakeside P.- T. A. will give a benefit card party tonight, at the school. It's to help the dental and welfare work. Plans for it were completed at the P.-T. A. meeting held Tuesday evening at the schoolhouse.

A feature of the program was an address by Dr. Morton N. Carlile on "Enriched Living Through Self-Realization." It stressed health for the individual and health for the community.

MEMBERSHIP DRIVE IS NOW GOING ON

Miss Nancy Storm gave two piano solos, Chopin Prelude No. 22 and Chopin Prelude No. 1.

The annual donation was made to the Community Chest.

The P.- T. A. membership drive is now on. A prize of one dollar will be given the boy or girl who obtains the most members; also 50c prizes for boy and girl second. Join now.

And don't forget the card party tonight. There will be door prizes and a comfort will be given away.

KILLER SOUGHT BY SHERIFF'S DEPUTY

WINTER GARDENS RESIDENTS REPORT LOSS OF ANIMALS

That a dog poisoner is at work in the Winter Gardens area and that four animals have been killed there in the past few days is the report made to Deputy Sheriff Stephen F. Sharpe by residents of the district.

Mrs. B. C. Hamann states that her Old English sheep dog, one of two of its special breed in San Diego has been poisoned and also that three other dogs came to their death in that way last week.

The dog belonging to the Hamann family was well known to people in and around Winter Gardens. The animal was called Blue Boy and was a fine affectionate dog of great intelligence. Often motorists would stop their cars on seeing Blue Boy and would make inquiries about him. All who knew and admired the animal will be sorry to hear of his untimely end.

Farm Center Gives Attractive Program

Lakeside Farm Center always gives good programs. The one last night at the Woman's Clubhouse kept up that reputation. It was well described by Chairman C. H. Foster as exceptionally fine.

First came a potluck dinner. Then Capt. Josiah Grundy told of his experiences at sea. (See page two for mention of a splendid book in which Capt. Grundy collaborated.)

Another pleasing feature of the Farm Center program was a showing of the motion picture "Grass."

The public is asked to remember that the Farm Bureau turkey dinner and dance will be held Friday evening Oct. 20. The dinner will be in the cafeteria at the schoolhouse from 6 to 8 and will be cafeteria style. Dancing will be in the auditorium after dinner.

CHIMNEY BUILDING

Chimney building requires special attention, says FHA. Consult a man who knows.

That's Easy, Says Postmaster, as Letter With Photo Instead of Name is Delivered

It's hard to baffle Postmaster Thomas F. Helm or the members of his staff even if you use a photo instead of a name on the address side of an envelope.

The other day an air mail letter came from Canada to Lakeside. It did not say to whom it was addressed but gave his picture instead. It didn't take more than a second to decide whom it was for. Indeed Postmaster Helm remarked:

"That was an easy one."

A 4-col. cut of the envelope appears in the San Diego Tribune of Tuesday, October 10 under the caption: "Invalid's photo only identification required on letter from San Diego Vacationist." Under the cut, which prominently displays the name Lakeside, is the following:

"Bearing no other clew to the identity of the addressee than his picture, the above letter was delivered to Charles Marassi of Lakeside. It was sent to him by Harry Bishop, head of the Evening Tribune art department, from Canada (Windsor, Ontario) where Bishop is vacationing. The picture shows Marassi with a bass taken from Otay Lake on one of the Bishop-Marassi fishing expeditions. Marassi, an invalid, whose chief joy is fishing, has such a reputation as an angler in Lakeside that no name was needed."

Starts Turkey and Orchard Patrol

These are nights of lonely driving for Depty Sheriff Stephen Sharpe. He's on turkey ranch and orchard patrol.

Sharpe received word from the Sheriff's office in San Diego that he had been allotted this district.

At Ramona Tom Isbell is doing the patroling in a prowl car added by Sheriff Dort to the Ramona district.

Lakeside Gives Autumn Style Show; Green Mantle Donned by Hills, Valleys

Lakeside is giving an autumn style show; green mantles have been donned by the hills and the valleys.

The show is earlier this year than usual but it is as beautiful as ever. Following early and abundant rains there has been a transformation scene. No longer is it correct to talk about "bare brown hills." They are clothed in verdure of an emerald hue.

Incidently there's a darned lot of weeds coming up in the garden; the Man with the Hoe has to get busy.

Returning from the weeds to the sublime, the view from the slopes in Lakeside Farms is one to delight painter and poet alike not to mention the farmers whose cattle crop the green grass and lazily chew the cud of contentment.

Looking southward from the Lucas place, over the well-kept acres of the Gibsons, to the willow-bordered river one is reminded of that ancient music hall song, "And the green grass grew all round, my boys, and the green grass grew all round."

And the green has all sorts of shades - all restful. No other color can compare with green for that quality.

Let's hope there wont come another hot spell and shrivel up this green. But if it does it will be unable to rob this mid-October of its magic. The green mantle which has covered the "good brown earth" here is vastly becoming. It must grow rusty again, of course, but (at its proper time) brown also is a color of charm.

P. S. The warm days this week have already begun to put brown tips on the green grass and shrubs.

WHAT'S-IT NITE RESERVE ASKED

MOUNTAIN TOWN'S ALLURE

I come, O ye mountains,
Ye pine woods, I come.

Mountain towns and their surroundings have a special allure for many people, especially in the autumn, when the forests are particularly beautiful, and in the winter, when snow sports may be enjoyed. It is lovely to be in a land "where the slopes are covered with pines and the cloud-strips hang soft in their heads."

That's one reason why city dwellers enjoy going to Julian, Among the Whispering Pines, as it is described in a folder shown to us the other day by a member of the staff.

Many people in San Diego County and City are well acquainted with Julian as an "all-year vacation paradise." It is well described as "the little city of opportunities among the pines, where snow falls and the red apple and tall timber grow."

The folder says, "Come to Julian." Who can resist the invitation?

SEEING THE SUPERVISOR

Every now and again one catches a glimpse of the Supervisor for San Diego County's Fifth District. He appears at meetings of various groups—whenever he can. But he has so large a district to cover and so many are the demands made upon him, that it is hardly to be expected that we should see more of him.

Fact is, this Supervisorial District is one of the largest in the State and also one of a most varied character. It includes coast country, mountains and desert. It is easy to get lost in it, as the Vista Press intimates. It says:

Ed Ainsworth, columnist of Los Angeles Times, is evidently lost in the wilds of San Diego county. Read this, from his column:

"I've been trying to perform a difficult feat. That is to get outside of the supervisorial district of Supervisor Bill Hart of San Diego county, who lives in Carlsbad. His territory extends along some forty miles of coastline, into San Diego city, extends way over into the Borego valley and heaven only knows how far this way. . . It's such a big district that if I ever traveled to Africa I'd be afraid all the time that some Bushman would pop up from behind a thorn tree and say, 'Hey, will you tell my supervisor, Bill Hart of Carlsbad, that we want a new road over here? Frank Buck ruined our other road with his last load of live hippopotamuses. . .' "

KISSED THE BLARNEY STONE

Coastline Dispatch of San Juan Capistrano hands out a delicate compliment to a woman of that charming place who has made a reputation as a civic worker. It says:

"She is wearing a new ring containing a stone from Blarney Castle and since kissing it she has become even more 'persuasive' than ever. Quite a combination, Southern charm and Irish blarney!"

Our own town, too, rejoices in the fact that it has a number of ladies every ready and willing to do their part in advancing the interests of the community. They may not have kissed the Blarney Stone but they are gifted with persuasive eloquence, an accomplishment for which they may well be envied.

The boy's bright dream is all before, the man's romance lies far behind.—Blackwood's Magazine.

A cheerfultemper, joined with innocence, will make beauty attractive, knowledge delightful and wit good-natured—Addison.

It has been well said that one part of knowledge consists in being ignorant of such things as are not worthy to be known.

Adds insult to disdain. New York woman left her husband and sent him a souvenir postcard from Atlantic City. It showed a girl standing beside an auto while a punctured tire was being fixed. Underneath were the words: Giving a flat tire the air.

THIS IS NEWSPAPER WEEK

As long as the newspaper is brimful of news and its comments are entertaining, if not enlightening, the average man takes his daily or weekly for granted. If it's a morning paper he wants it delivered promptly so that he can sink his face in it when said face is not in a cup of coffee; if it's an evening paper he knows it will be at his home in time for him to skim through before he goes out for a bit of bridge or a stroll around town.

The newspaper is just one of those things that every family has to have along with electric light, hot and cold water and food. So, as an official of the California Newspaper Publishers Association recently remarked, "its function as the mirror of community life is so widely recognized that the newspaper is taken for granted."

This being the case it was a happy idea that came to General Manager John B. Long of the C. N. P. A. some years ago that annually there be a seven-day period to be known as Newspaper Week. This is it.

Readers are asked just to pause for a moment and give a little thought to the efficient work of their newspapers throughout California.

San Diego County is really fortunate in having published within its borders daily and weekly newspapers of high class. They are dependable, reliable and as accurate as it is possible to make them. They perform fine and useful service to their various communities. Newspaper Week helps as a reminder of this fact.

EDUCATION FOR DEMOCRACY

That word "Democracy" is heard a lot of times every day now. You can't go down the street but you hear it and it appears many times in each day's newspaper. Over the radio, too, it is talked about. Last Saturday, for example, listeners in to KFSD learned some professorial opinions on the question, Shall the schools prepare citizens to take their places in a Democratic society?

Not so long ago a Congress on Education for Democracy was held in New York. One comment on it was that "there can be no doubt that if Democracy, as we understand it in America, is to survive the attacks upon it from within and without, its fundamental principles must be taught in our schools to every new generation."

What are those principles? Well, most speakers at the Congress said the chief one is "personal liberty, individual liberty of thought and action." They emphasized, however, that liberty is not license to do things that infringe upon other citizens rights." One speaker over the radio last Saturday put it another way. He said "Democracy is a way of life which implies free choice."

A remark attributed to Earl Baldwin, a former prime minister of England, is that "Democacy is the most difficult form of government." Why? Because its success is the individual responsibility of each citizen. Earl Baldwin added: "The spiritual foundation of Democracy is a recognition of the dignity of man and his individuality, and that dignity and individuality are his as a child of God."

By all means, then, there should be education for Democracy in the schools.

30-THURSDAY PROPOSAL

Now that the Supervisors have fixed the polling places and announced the officers for the November 7 special election the newspapers of the county, and especially of San Diego city, are earnestly warning the people of the dangers which will threaten the State if the so-called Ham and Eggs plan is adopted.

A fact hard to ignore is that university instructors, ministers of the gospel, bankers and business leaders, and women of commanding positions in clubs and schools have united in condemnation of the 30-Thursday proposal. They believe it "would be a calamity to California" should this initiative measure be enacted into law at the ballot box next month.

WAR PICTURES RAPPED

When persons seek an evening's amusement at a motion picture theater do they want to see a bunch of war horror films? Producers in Hollywood, who probably never got nearer the front than the Brown Derby, are rushing out pictures that bring condemnation from high circles.

For instance a well deserved rap has been given to war films by Dr. Ray Lyman Wilbur, president of Stanford University. He asked the movie and newsreel companies to consider "the danger to children's impressionable minds" of terrifying war scenes and propaganda in films.

Wittiest comment on Hitler's peace-or-else speech came from a Frenchman. Said he: Hitler wants peace while he digests Poland which he gobbled so greedily.

Surely no California voter would betray the State for thirty pieces of paper.

Chinese have many wise sayings. One is, if you don't climb the mountain you can't view the plain.

The Country Garden

By Margaret Tipton Wheatly

POTTED PLANTS

As the cooler days come we begin to think of hoarding our blossoms. Some of the winter blooming annuals, if potted up, and moved into the house now will come into flower much sooner than in the open garden. A shelf placed under a sunny window will be ever so attractive when filled with gay annuals in colored pots. This is also the time to plant the paper white narcissus. One charming idea noted recently was to take a tall glass cylindrical vase, place a few pebbles and sand in the bottom to about 2 inches deep, carefully arrange the bulbs stem-end up on this bed, moisten lightly, and set in a dark place until root growth is established. Bring out, and as the stems and foliage grow up to the top, turn so as to have the vase filled well with good straight stems. This is a really novel way in which to grow these best of winter cheer producers.

POT MARIGOLDS

Originally, every country house had its shelf of potted spicey fragrance for the kitchen. No plant was more popular than the pot marigold, indeed, this was the way our garden Calendula got its name. This old fashioned flower has had great attention lavished upon it of recent years. The hybridizers have gone so far as to breed a scentless marigold. Some will still prefer the old spicey favorite, however.

All house plants require to be washed occasionally. This can be done either in the kitchen sink or out in the garden if a fine enough spray is used. If they are washed in the sink, use a very weak soap suds and taking each leaf in the hand wash off carefully, rinsing thoroughly after the soap water bath.

WATERING HOUSE PLANTS

Occasionally, it will be noted that house plants do not thrive as they should, and this can be attributed to the scanty supply of water some receive. The proper way to water house plants is to set the pot into a pan of water and let it stand until the moisture reaches the top of the soil. The inch or so of space between the soil in which the plant is potted and the top of the jardinere is seldom enough water for a thrifty plant. A good thorough soaking twice a week is usually enough water for most plants.

REPOTTING HOUSE PLANTS

Plants soon become root bound when confined to the limited soil contained in small pots. A good way to tell if your plants are suffering from malnutrition is to up-end the pot, while holding one hand under it and the stem of the plant between the fingers, tap it gently on a hard surface to loosen the adhering rootlets. If the mat of roots are completely covering the outside of the earth, then it is time to repot it. Often a pot only an inch larger around will be sufficenly big enough for this work, as it gives quite a new bed of soil in which the roots can grow. The new soil should be tamped tightly about the old, with the handle of a tool or stick.

FEEDING HOUSE PLANTS

Since our soil container, in this case the flower pot, is already filled with soil, the fertilizer will be best applied in liquid form. If manure water is wanted, take a small bag and place the manure in it, and set this into a can of water. After the water has turned quite brown it is ready to use. The plants can be watered occasionally, when they begin to show signs of slackening in their growth, with this diluted food.

Other feeding agencies may be dissolved right in the water, since they leave no residue as does the manure.

SQUARE RIGGERS BEFORE THE WIND

Making models of ships is an occupation for some people, an avocation for others. Both classes will welcome a book just published by E. P. Dutton and Company, New York. It is entitled "Square Riggers Before the Wind," and is of special interest to San Diego County because two Lakeside men are responsible for it and the fine photographic etchings are by a San Diego man. The volume is described on the title page as follows:

"A book about the old square-rigged sailing ships, with an exposition of the simplified method of makng scenic models of these ships under sail, as developed by Capt. Josiah Grundy, master mariner; text and drawings by Wilkins W. Wheatly; photographic etchings by Sherman Trease."

It's a captivating book and a handsome production. The publishers and the local people responsible for it are alike to be congratulated. It will be much appreciated by lovers of the sea and by makers of ship models.

Mr. Wheatly, in an interesting preface, tells the purposes of the work, in part, as follows:

"This is a book so different in its scope as to require an explanation of its purpose and the plan upon which it has been constructed.

"There are many books on sailing ships—covering the history, art and romance of the whole era of sail and there are many other books that explain how to make ship models. But this volume is believed to be unique for in it we have the double interest of an account of life and work at sea aboard the old square-riggers, coupled with a practical craft book giving simplified instructions for quickly building scenic, "action models of these ships maneuvering under sail."

Mr. Wheatly also calls attention to the fact that "the manner of illustrating the book is also without precedent. The photographic etchings showing the models in various sailing situations serve a double purpose. They illustrate the various maneuvers described in the text and are actual examples of the results to be obtained by following the directions for building these ship models."

This book does more than describe the art of building the simple but intensely interesting scenic models of the square rigged sailing ship; it tells much about the ships the models picture. Thus the authors depart from the pattern set by other books on ship models for they present the subject in such a way that both the novice and the master ship model builder or woodworker may be assured of satisfactory results and they also enable reader and craftsman to gain an understanding and appreciation of the romance and adventure of the era of sail."

Other welcome and valuable features are a glossary of nautical words and terms used in the text and a complete index.

The Lakeside men responsible for the book are fully qualified. Captain Josiah Grundy, now a citrus grower here, went to sea when he was 14 and advanced by regular stages to master. He sailed in square-rigged ships in the 80's and 90's and then transferred to steam. He has held responsible positions in such great ports as Liverpool, England, and Vancouver, B. C.

Mr. Wheatly trained as a young man in naval architecture and had practical experience in shipbuilding at the Union Iron Works, San Francisco. Moreover, having been brought up on San Francisco Bay he absorbed much ship lore. In addition he did much research.

So these Lakeside collaborators had a good foundation for their interesting and imposing volume to the preparation of which they devoted months of hard work, The result justifies it.

FORGET THE EVIL

Every year of my life I grow more convinced that it is wisest and best to fix our attention on the beautiful and the good, and dwell as little as possible on the evil and the false.—Cecil.

This Week in Washington

Washington, Oct. 9 (Autocasterr)—President Roosevelt, in his address at the opening of the special session of Congress which is considering his proposal to repeal the embargo against the sale of weapons and ammunition to any nation at war, appealed to the Senators and Representatives to approach the subject in a non-partisan spirit.

Few are doing it.

PARTY LINE UP

The battle against the repeal of the arms embargo is so definitely a battle of Republicans against Democrats that it has had the effect, among other things, of bringing back into support of the Administration many Democrats who have been opponents of the President in most of his recent program, including Alfred E. Smith. Even venerable Senator Carter Glass of Virginia, whose feud with Mr. Roosevelt has been of more than six years' duration, is back again in the same fold with such New Deauers as Senators Pepper of Florida and Bilbo of Mississippi. Senators Pat Harrison, Harry Byrd and "Cotton Ed" Smith of South Carolina also are back. The fight therefore, is distinctly a party battle, each side believing that its victory will strengthen its party's chances of success in the 1940 Presidential election.

That, and not neutrality in any real sense, is the actual issue. The wheel-horses of the battle on the Republican side are Senators Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, Hiram Johnson of California, Borah of Idaho and Nye of North Dakota.

That the Republicans intend to take the fullest political advantage of the neutrality debates is undisputed. The belief here is that the member of that party who will gain the greatest personal political advantage is Senator Vandenberg. Mr. Vandenberg is an avowed candidate for the Presidency, as he was in 1936. He has been sounding the slogan: "Keep America out of War" for many months, and has gained a much larger popular following than he had a year ago, by his repetition of that warning. Vandenberg's chances for the Republican nomination seem to Washington politicians to be better than ever. Polls of public opinion still show District Attorney Thomas E. Dewey of New York in first place, but with Vandenberg gaining, and far ahead of Senator Taft.

THIRD TERM SENTIMENT

On the other hand, the same polls show a surprising increase in public sentiment for a third term for Mr. Roosevelt. That is accounted for here by the President's oft-repeated declaration that he intends to keep America ou of wer. On that point he has practically the whole people with him, or would if all literally believed in his program.

The belief in important political circles in both parties that we are not going to war, whether or no, would appear to be back of the efforts of both parties to be in a position to claim credit for keeping the United States out of war.

The most complete confirmation of the attitude of the Republican leaders to reject Mr. Roosevelt's request for the adjournment of partisanship was the address of Chairman John D. M. Hamilton of the Republican National Committee, in which he declared that the President was asking Congress to become another rubber-stamp to give him a blanket indorsement. Members of both parties went along with the President in 1933, when the national emergency was apparent to everybody, but no such emergency now exists, Mr. Hamilton said.

What will be the final action of Congress, it is difficult to forecast.

KINDERGARTEN MOTHERS MEET NEXT THURSDAY

A meeting of the Kindergarten Mothers will be held on Thursday, Oct. 19 at 2 p.m. in the kindergarten room at the Union Elementary school. There will be discussion and a study period. All P.-T. A. mothers, and other members are invited: in fact anyone interested will be welcomed. It is planned to hold similar meetings once a month.

Mainly About People

By Lorena Sands

Lakeside, Oct. 13, 1939

Dear Eleanor:

I have been sitting here for hours trying to think how to begin your letter this week, and just can't seem to perk—so here goes for the news. The Vanoni boys Thomas and Albert and their ather, H. A. Vanoni were spectators at the first football game of the season on Friday, locally speaking, at State College and were practically soaked to the skin. The rain didn't seem to dampen their spirits any however. Albert is an ex-football player of State, and I understand was the pride and joy of the team.

Venison dinners seem to be the order of the week at the Erman Kouns home. They have been doing a good deal of entertaining with the huge deer and 30 pound salmon which Erman bought home from his expedition north. Thursday night Mrs. Ruby Nelson and Mr. Cecil Deering were guests. On Saturday the Robert Williams enjoyed soup to nuts at the Kouns.

You probably know that Mrs. Muriel Miller is expected home today after an appendicitis operation at the Quintard hospital. She has been there about ten days.

Have you heard that Rowland H. Smith has enlisted in the Naval Training station at San Diego? He has just started there for his first training.

I understand that Mr. Charles Kreis is building a new residence in Riverview Farms.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Klippel of Whittier and their three children visited the C. H. Fosters over the week end. Mrs. Klippel is the daughter of the Fosters. They also had Mr. and Mrs. Malcome Crawford and daughter of Long Beach visit them this week.

I was so sorry to learn yesterday that Mrs. A. W. Hall has sprained her ankle. I do hope she will be able to be up and about soon.

Mrs. Kenneth Hayes is spending the week at the home of her parents Mr. and Mrs. John Rocchio.

Sunday was spent in San Diego by the L. F. Walker family visiting the Charles Walkers. The party went fishing in the afternoon.

Bernadines was the scene of a mosy enjoyable dinner party on Sunday night. The Bill Simpsons, Otis Barkers, and Fred Prindles were in one party.

Mr. A. C. Flor of La Mesa is spending a few days vacationing on his ranch in Lakeside.

On Monday Mrs. Florence Brown of San Marcos was a guest at the William Dallimore home, and Mr. E. V. Dallimore is spending a few days there.

Little John Darrough was rushed to the hospital in San Diego last Friday with an attack of appendicitis. It seems the doctors decided not to operate and John is back home again.

Dorothy and Walt Riggs spent last weekend up in Julian at her sisters home, the Fred Grands.

Maybe you knew the J. P. Jansens who were former residents of Lakeside? They were visitors at the John Lengs last Friday. The Jansens are now living at Ocean Beach.

And so in haste,

Affectionately, Lorena

GROSSMONT HIGH SCHOOL PICNIC

Members of the football team of Grossmont High school were guests at the annual corn roast held at El Monte Park. This year Clarence Foster and John Wilkinson were the hosts. The affair was Friday night, Sept. 20.

The faculty of Grossmont High school held their picnic on the following Tuesday evening, Oct. 3. Guests were the husbands and wives of the faculty members.

DINNER PARTY FOR MRS. C. C. CLUBB

A farewell dinner was given for Mrs. C. C. Clubb Monday night at her grandmother's home, Mrs. Robert Muse of San Diego. Those present were Mrs E. L. Muse, mother of the guest of honor, Mrs. Leonard Muse, and Mrs. Edith Davis. Mrs. Clubb left for St. Louis, Mo.

NEW MEMBERS VOTED INTO LAKESIDE WOMAN'S CLUB

Regular meeting of the Lakeside Woman's Club was held Thursday, October 12 at the clubhouse with Mrs. George Curtis presiding.

New members voted into the club were Mesdames Everett Fortner, Gus Huffman, A. R. Jacobs, Wesley Beadle, Mark Jones, May Porter and Ruth Woodward.

Mrs. Desmond as chairman of the entertainment presented a lovely musical program. Selections by Mrs. Everett Fortner on the Saxaphone accompanied by Mrs. May Porter were "Wishing" and "Especially for You." Mrs. Porter played "Under the Leaves" by Thome.

Refreshments were served by the hostesses.

At the October 26 meeting of the club Mr. and Mrs. Streeter Blair will give a talk on antiques. All members are requested to bring antiques for display.

The next meeting of the Book section of the club will be held Nov. 3. the first Friday of the month. Mrs. Julia Trigg Stewart is scheduled to review a most interesting book.

CLUB HONORS IT'S ADVISOR MRS. FANKHANEL

Tawasi club of Lakeside held its meeting at the home of Mrs. Erman Kouns on Friday evening. Mrs. Robert Williams, Ramona, was cohostess. After the business meeting, the members worked on scrap books which they will give to children confined to hospitals.

Club members celebrated the birthday of their advisor Mrs. Earl Fankhanel, with a surprise birthday cake and present Decorations for the surprise were colored balloons with birthday greeting cards tied to bright ribbons. One balloon was tied to a huge package containing a beautifully quilted comfort made by the members of the Twasi club. The rest of the evening was enjoyed in playing Hush a card game.

CHAPTER III

Synopsis

Nineteen-year-old Anne Ordway realizes suddenly that something is wrong between her father and mother. She hears servants whispering and senses tension when her mother asks her father for money before her bridge game with the Dorsays—and David. Anne adores her beautiful mother, Elinor, and her father, Francis; and she had always liked and trusted their old friend David. Yet it is David about whom the servants are whispering. Vicky, Anne's companion, is aware of the situation, too. Anne steals away to meet Gary Brooks in the moonlight and they meet a strange man at a campfire. Wakened at two by the sound of her mother's singing, Anne, from the stair landing, sees David with his arms around Elinor. She tells Vicky, her companion. Vicky pretends to smell smoke and goes to the drawing-room. David leaves before Fancis comes home. Vicky remonstrates with Anne.

Elinor threw herself into a chair, and the rose and silver of her gown and the deeper rose of the chair's back seemed to mock the whiteness of her face. "How much is she my child? You've been with her since she was five. You've taken my place. And Francis did that, not I."

"He did it because you said you hated being tied down."

But there was more to it than that. Vicky had not told the whole story. Of how Francis Ordway had come home late one night from Baltimore to find Anne with a raging fever and in the care of an ignorant nursemaid, while Elinor was off to a hunt ball at the country club. When he telephoned her, she had refused to come until the dancing was over. So Francis had sent for Vicky and Vicky had stayed.

"I lost a lot tonight and I didn't dare ask David to help me out. Do you think it is true, Vicky, what Francis said? That David is in debt to him?"

"He wouldn't have said it if it weren't true," Vicky stated positively.

Elinor's losses of late had been so great that she had used desperate mean to get money to pay them. Now she was at her wits' end, and in spite of her resentment of Vicky's interference in her affairs, it seemed as if Vicky after all was the only stable thing in her world.

Suddenly they heard the big car outside.

In another moment Francis entered. He stopped on the threshold and looked his surprise. "Not in bed yet?" he asked.

"I have been," Vicky said, "but I smelledsmoke and came down."

Elinor said, "It was the fireplace."

"I'll go upstairs now," said Vicky. "I'm tired."

Francis stopped her with a motion of his hand. "No sit down, Vicky. I'm glad I found you here. I want to talk about Anne."

"Yes?" But Vicky did not sit down.

"I've been wondering if you and she might not like a winter in the south of France?"

Elinor's face darkened. "Why?"

"I want to get her away."

"From me?"

"From both of us—if you will have it—and the life we lead."

"What's the matter with the life we lead?"

"You know as well as I. It's good enough for you and me, perhaps. We've made our beds and we've got to lie on them. But it isn't good enough for Anne. And besides, there's Garry."

"What's the matter with Garry?"

"Nothing—as Garry. But a lot as Anne's husband."

Vicky spoke. "You can trust Anne. And may I say something about your plan for sending her away?"

"Of course."

"I think if Anne goes at all, she should go with her mother."

They stared at her.

"With me? Elinor asked, amazed.

"Do you mean," Francis demanded, "that you are separating yourself from Anne? You can't do that!"

"Only for a time."

"But why, Vicky?"

"Anne must learn to lean on her own strength. Not on mine."

Elinor interposed, "But I don't want to go away. "I've planned my winter—and Anne's And what does it matter if she marries Garry? He has money and good looks, and worships the ground she walks on.

"He worships himself, Elinor. Anne would be just an addition to his other possessions."

"Aren't most wives just that?" Elinor's hands went out in a little gesture of impatience "And if it isn't Garry, it will be somebody else. Oh, I'm too tired to argue, Francis. I'm going to bed." She stood up, slender and shining in her pink and silver.

Her husband, his eyes on her shining slimness, said abruptly, "I thought you were wearing black when I left."

"I was, but I hate black." She threw the words over her shoulder as she left him, but when she reached the threshold she turned. "We had a rotten game. I suppose it's useless to ask you for any more money?"

"I gave you all I could spare."

She shrugged her shoulders and went slowly up the stairs.

Left alone in the library with Vicky Francis said, "She put on that dress for—David?"

Vicky had no reply for that. But after an interval in which she stared into the fire she said, "Sometimes things are not so serious as they seem. And if you will only send her away—"

"Elinor?"

"Yes."

"But why with Anne?"

"Anne loves her. And it will give her time to think."

"Elinor?"

"Yes."

"But where will you go, Vicky?"

"To my home on the Eastern Shore."

"What will Anne say? She won't let you go, Vicky."

"She will when I tell her."

"What will ye tell her?"

"That her mother needs her."

"You think," Francis asked tensely, "that it isn't too late?"

She spoke with a certain serene confidence.

"Sometimes life works out our problems for us."

"What a fatalist you are!"

She smiled wistfully. "Perhaps it isn't fatalism. Perhaps it is faith. And don't worry about Anne. She's a strong little thing, with all her softness."

She saw his face quivering with deep emotion. "I worship her," he said. "She's the one lovely thing in this rotten world."

She had no words for that. and she left him standing by the fire, his eyes on the dying flames.

Meanwhile the man in the meadow had not found sleep under the stars.

It had been an enchanting adventure with that child in the moonlight. A rare moment to tuck away in one's memory. And that was all. Yet if things had been different he would have tried to see her again—to savor once more her exquisiteness.

He had not thought there was such a girl in this modern world. She had recalled to his mind the painting of Bouguereau that he had seen in a Baltimore gallery of a young maiden with a lamb in her arms. "Innocence" was the name in the catalogue. Well, she was like that—virginal, with a curious touch of vividness.

The chances were that she would marry the young man. A woman was like that—propinquity and a man madly in love with her! She would mistake her need for love for loving.

It was no business of his, of course. That was why he had sent her away. That he might never see her again, and that she might never guess his identity. Why should he impose his past on her? Why speak the name that she would see black in the headlines if she opened the morning paper?

That was the worst of it—the papers and the things they said. This very pilgrimage of his was an escape from it all. If he could only tell her the truth! She would, he thought, understand.

In a few hours he would be on his way and Anne would forget him. But he didn't want to be forgotten. He looked at his watch. Two-thirty. No more sleep tonight! He put another stick on the fire and by the light of the leaping flames wrote a letter, tearing leaves from his notebook until he had a sheaf of them. He addressed an envelope, sealed it and made his way across the meadow, coming at last to the garden and the tall hedge.

He found the curtains drawn at the windows of the big house so he could see nothing. Following a flagged path he reached the driveway, and a tall iron gate with a mail box hung on the brick wall beside it where he posted his letter. Retracing his steps he stood again on the little hill where earlier in the evening Anne had met Garry, and looked down over the sleeping garden.

From the height where he stood, Charles could see straight through the window of a darkened room on the second floor of the house and beyond that to the lighted hall. And as he looked a woman came within his line of vision. She was ascending the stairs.

He saw her—first her head, then the whiteness of her neck and arms, then rosy and shining as the dawn, her pink and silver gown. She was very beautiful, with an almost startling beauty like the splendid ladies in Romney's paintings or Sir Joshua's. But her beauty left Charles cold. Such goddesses belonged in portrait galleries to be hung on walls! He had a feeling that the woman was Anne's mother. Yet there was nothing in common between the golden-lighted loveliness of the daughter and the dark brilliance of the other.

She stood now in the open door of the darkened room. She seemed to hesitate, then entered and was lost in the gloom. A shaft of moonlight striking through the shadows shone on a shimmering heap of whiteness that seemed to catch and hold the light in a pool of radiance. And it was toward this pool of radiance that a hand came presently out of the darkness—a white hand and a bare and slender arm.

Then all at once the hand was withdrawn, and where there had been that shimmering heap was empty space! And in the long and lighted hall a flash of pink and silver as a tall figure went flying toward a room at the far end.

Charles wondered a bit as he made his way down the hill. There had been an air of mystery about the woman's movements. But one's imagination plays tricks at times. And there was undoubtedly a perfectly commonplace solution to the scene.

When he returned to his camp his fire was dying, little spirals o wood smoke scenting acridly the air about him. How Margot had loved that acrid scent!

"I shall never forget this, Carl," she had said on their honeymoon. "I shall never forget." And now she had forgotten. It was he who would remember those other nights under the moon when he and she had built their little fires—"Altars to our gods, Carl,"—and had watched the flames die and the coals glow and the smoke curling. Wonderful nights, wonderful days, yet before the honeymoon was over he had known that there were altars in his own soul where Margot would never worship with him. Still he had loved her doggedly refusing to believe her anything less than he had thought her until the day had come when she had flung him and his love away.

And now—woodsmoke and the thought of Anne!

Would a man dare love more than once? And if he did, would there not come memories of that first and splendid passplintered their glasses when sion that had swept over him as a boy?

Charles cast the thought from him and jumping to his feet began to gather up his belongings When he came to the cup from which Anne had drunk he stood with it in his hand for a moment, then dropped it on a rock where it splintered into a thousand pieces.

Thus in the old days men had they had drunk to the queen! He smiled a little as he went on with his packing. He recognized in himself the incurable romantic. But romantic or not, no one should drink again from the cup which that charming child had lifted to her lips.

He quenched his fire with water from the nearby stream, and a little later his car slid from under the shadowy pines and into the open.
